

Inclusive Access Success Story

Inclusive access programs are growing at colleges and universities across the country as publishers and schools partner up to address student affordability and improve access to course materials.

University of Missouri System

Wiley proudly partners with the University of Missouri system to drive student achievement by participating in their AutoAccess program.

The University of Missouri system launched their Inclusive Access program in summer 2014 responding to the administration's call for affordable course materials

AutoAccess, Mizzou's Digital Content Solution, is run through the Mizzou Stores and has saved 30,000+ students $2.2 million dollars to date.

AutoAccess offers:

- Day 1 access to critical learning resources through LMS
- Robust interactive digital content
- Reduced costs to the students compared to print/digital options
- Increased student engagement

The benefit

While every institution is different, benefits to participating in inclusive access include:

Significant Discounts: Wiley believes most students will purchase course materials through inclusive access programs and, therefore, we are able to offer larger discounts based on volume of sales.

Day One Access to Course Materials: Students are able to access their materials on the first day of class, an important contributor to student success. Digital course materials are proven to improve student performance, resulting in higher grades and higher course completion rates.

Trusted Materials: We know that students and instructors rely on the accuracy of the course content. Well-researched and vetted content is a hallmark of Wiley's great publishing history.
